To Sea it Differently: Art and Plastic Pollution

San Francisco based artist Katherine B. Young is best known for her contemporary drawings and paintings of the ocean. In this talk she will introduce her recent work addressing the problem of plastic pollution.

By showing you her new series “Aquaria of the Plastocene”, she hopes for you to see the plastic problem in a new light. In addition to seeing the artwork and learning the story behind each piece, you will get some behind the scenes glimpses of how the art is conceived and constructed.

Following the art show, she will discuss some surprising facts about plastic use and provide examples of meaningful actions you can take.
